38 COCKTAIL DINNER: THE SPIRIT OF MARYLAND

Did you know that Maryland is home to over two dozen distilleries, many of them making world-class spirits? Would you like to try some of them, as well as a few classic Maryland drinks? Join us at home for an afternoon and evening of classic Maryland food, spirit tasting and cocktails. Festivities will begin during the late afternoon. (We are targeting 3 pm, but can accommodate people's schedules.) Each course will pair a regional dish with a choice of two cocktails featuring a different Maryland spirit, including local rye whiskey, gin, rum, brandy, applejack, and even Laotian rice whiskey. We keep the serving size of each drink small so that more can be sampled. Non-alcoholic drinks will also be provided.

The hosts will not be imbibing and are able to provide conveyance (within about a 20 mile radius) to and from the occasion. If the weather is pleasant, the festivities will be held outdoors. [You can bring a designated driver (eats but does not imbibe alcoholic drinks) for free, but let us know in advance so that we can make sure there is enough food.]

44 LACTO-FERMENTED PICKLE CLASS

Before pickles were made using vinegar, they were made through the process of lacto-fermentation. This is the method by which yogurt, kimchi, and sauerkraut are still made. Lacto-fermented pickles are delicious and provide natural probiotics which have been scientifically demonstrated to improve our health. Fortunately, they are very easy to make at home using only vegetables, salt, water, and time -- no cooking required! Join Allison Ehrman as she offers a repeat of her successful class in how to make these pickles, including a light lunch featuring samples of her own pickle recipes. Each attendee will choose from fresh summer produce and spices to create their own customized jar of pickles to take home and enjoy later, complete with a special lacto-fermentation lid and printed instructions/recipes. You have never tasted pickles until you've tasted lacto-fermented pickles.
